The protection of human rights, as a legal value of the EU, has a primary ideological significance, because it is used to form, direct and justify some areas of activity and condemn others. In the conditions of Ukraine's European integration, commitment to the legal values of the Union, improvement of its own human rights protection system should become important geopolitical and socio-cultural tasks for our country, since according to the criteria for joining the EU, only a state with an appropriate level of observance of human rights and fundamental freedoms can become a full member of the European Union [1].

The process of European integration in Ukraine includes deep political, economic and social integration into European structures, demanding reforms in various areas. The Association Agreement between the European Union and its Member States, of the one part, and Ukraine [2], the other part is one of the key mechanisms containing obligations regarding the protection of human rights and the principles of legal statehood for Ukraine. EU integration covers various sectors, including aspects of human rights and intellectual property. However, it is important to consider that integration in different sectors may differ in scope and level of implementation. In the context of Ukraine's path to European integration, there is a need to analyze issues related to the legal regulation of human rights to freedom of movement, which is recognized as a means of development and resolution of social conflicts [3]. The regulation of the rights and freedoms of Ukrainian citizens in the context of constitutional law is reflected in the constitutional system and the system of laws aimed at ensuring respect for human rights, protecting their interests and guaranteeing equality before the law.

In general, it is necessary to update the basis of the agreement between the European Union and Ukraine, introducing new legal acts and monitoring the quality of cooperation.

An important aspect is the improvement of the monitoring system, which serves as a tool for identifying possible problems and providing recommendations for improving the effectiveness of cooperation. Improving mechanisms for the protection of human and citizen rights and freedoms is a constantly relevant task for states at the national level and international intergovernmental organizations, such as the European Union [4]. Therefore, the process of European integration has a direct impact on the regulation of the rights and freedoms of citizens in Ukraine.

This is due to the need to meet certain criteria for joining the European Union, which includes respect for human rights and the fight against corruption and many others. Ukraine should take measures to improve the protection of the rights and freedoms of citizens, in particular in the areas of human rights, freedom of speech, justice, religious freedom and protection of women's rights [5]. Ukraine should take measures to improve the protection of the rights and freedoms of citizens, in particular in the areas of human rights, freedom of speech, justice, religious freedom and protection of women's rights.

In general, European integration contributes to increasing the level of protection of human rights and freedoms in Ukraine, as it contributes to the approximation of national legislation to international and European standards and contributes to a more transparent and democratic development of the country. Taking into account various factors affecting the effectiveness of the regulation of the rights, freedoms and duties of citizens in Ukraine will help to achieve the most effective protection of their rights. Ukraine must solve existing challenges by strengthening the rule of law, fighting corruption, and implementing European human rights standards both in legislation and in real life for successful European integration. This will pave the way for deeper integration with the EU and ensure the protection of citizens' rights at a high level.
